Rights reserved to the author

Upon execution of the contract, authors/editors always retain the following rights:

- The right to make copies and distribute copies (including via e-mail) of the Work for own personal use, including for own classroom teaching use and to research colleagues, for personal use by such colleagues, and the right to present the Work at meetings or conferences and to distribute copies of the Work to the delegates attending the meeting.
- The right to post the Work on the Author's personal or institutional web site or server, provided acknowledgement is given to the original source of publication.
- For the Author's employer, if the Work is a 'work for hire', made within the scope of the Author's employment, the right to use all or part of the Work for other intra-company use (e.g. training), including by posting the Work on secure, internal corporate intranets.
- The right to use the Work for his/her further career by including the Work in other publications such as a dissertation and/ or a collection of articles provided acknowledgement is given to the original source of publication.

The Author's rights to reproduce and distribute the Work are subject to two conditions:

1. The publication by the Publisher should be properly credited by including the following text: "Reprinted from (name of publication), (volume no.), (issue number), (date of publication), (page range), with permission of Kluwer Law International."
2. No commercial use of the publication should be involved. Commercial Purposes includes the use or posting of articles for commercial gain including the posting by companies or their employee-authored works for use by customers; commercial exploitation such as directly associating advertising with such postings; the charging of fees for document delivery or access; or the systematic distribution to other people (other than known colleagues), whether for a fee or for free.
