"EDUCATIONAL IDEALS."

ADDRESS BY MR. McCOY.

The Director of Education (Mr. W. T. McCoy), in speaking on educational ideals at the Rotary Club's luncheon on Thursday, said the educational work of this State was planned to create an attitude of joy and a spirit of reverence that would act as an inspiration to the work of the day.

Mr. McCoy, who dealt at length with the aims and ideals of the Education Department, said the schools of to-day differed in many respects from the schools he and those present had attended. He thought the present day schools were much better. There had been changes in aim, method, and the subject matter of instruction. The environment was more hygienic, comfortable and pleasant. Considerable sums of money had been spent in the erection of new schools and in improving the lighting ventilation, and seating of the old buildings. The teachers and pupils, aided by the parents, had done much to beautify the grounds, and to supply a plentiful and well-colled stock of literature suited to the ages and experience of the different grades. The methods of instruction, too, had changed. The three R's were still taught, but in the lower schools the work was based on Montessori principles. It was a welcome comparison to the joyless methods of the old schools. The most skilful teachers now undertook the primary work. He considered the aim of the teachers should be to impart to the child such knowledge and skill, and to train him in the habits and virtues, and to place before him such ideals as would enable him in the future to meet the needs of life, and to take an intelligent and effective part in the civic and social life of the community. The aim of the primary school was to provide a sound moral, physical and intellectual training for the pupil, and to lay solid foundations upon which the superstructure of the child's education could be reared. The task of the teacher was not so hard in those cases where the home training was wise and tactful, but when he dealt with children who had not received the benefit of a good home training the difficulties were very great. The environment of some of the public schools was not all that could be desired. The children in one of those schools came from the poorest homes where the surroundings were often sordid, but he had heard the same children sing most recently and sweetly. The teachers in those areas were to be congratulated on the great work they were doing. Such services as they gave could not be measured by salary. They were missionaries in the highest sense. Their greatest problem, and their hardest task was to train children to obtain ripe judgment and appreciation of the things that were of real worth.

Notwithstanding all that had been done he thought the educational system was far from being perfect. In his opinion the ideal system was one that provided a ladder from the kindergarten to the University for all those who had the ability and desire to profit by it. They had the outlines of such a system in South Australia. The State had free higher primary schools and high schools to cover the educational ground between the primary school and the University. They had bursaries to take the most deserving through a University course. The problem of the education of the mental defective was awaiting solution. He believed with Dr. Berry that the feeble-minded provided a large number of prostitutes and criminals, and that by the propogation of their species they were making the path more difficult for the succeeding generation to deal with. In referring to the adolescent period Mr. McCoy said the State could not afford to allow the young folk to drift through the most formative portion of their lives without adequate supervision and proper training to fit them for the exercise of the rights of citizenship. Some interest outside the monotony of their daily avocation was necessary. He realised that the chief duty was to weld into the characters of the children fearless truth, bravery, honor, activity, manly skill, temperance, justice, courtesy, benevolence, humility, patience, and self-control. Above all they must cultivate that spirit of true patriotism which would lead them to love their country, to gladly fully to obey the laws, and honor the King. (Applause.)

Dr. F. S. Hone spoke in appreciation of the address, which he heartily endorsed. If it had not been for the State providing bursaries, he said, he would not have been able to go to college.
