

3 March 1943

Dear Dean,

Many thanks for your letter of March 1st. and for what you say about my memorandum. Genetic work in Cambridge has become so dispersed and dissociated from the Chair of Genetics that it would, I think, be impossible to plan at once any closely co-ordinated teaching of the subject.

I shall be most anxious, as arrangements advance and possibilities become clearer, to associate the Chair, if it is offered to me, with a continuous series of studies in Medical Genetics such as we were doing at the Walton Laboratory, and which, as the emergence of the Rhesus-factor has shown, cannot with advantage be abandoned, even during the war.

I will get Taylor to try to arrange a meeting with you, if I may, when next we are together in Cambridge.

Yours sincerely,
