

24th May, 1958.

My dear Gavin,

I am sending you a copy of a review of Lady Barlow's recent book which I have just written for Nature. I have also read the letters in The Times, and my review perhaps shows some signs of this for I could not agree with you more.

The charge of plagiarism, however, is a particularly <sup>offensive</sup> ~~sensitive~~ one with as many hooks as a burr, just because Charles Darwin was concerned not only with the theory of evolutionary change, but also on a large scale with the assembly of factual evidence that it had in fact occurred.

I am sending my note in to Nature at once.

Sincerely yours,

Enc.
