

2nd October, 1945.

Dear Mr. Dufrenoy,

I am sorry to have been so long with your sister's paper, but I have been consulting people on the possibility of publication in journals devoted to literary studies, and this has taken time.

I am afraid, however, that after all it will certainly be better to seek for publication in the United States, where the paper situation is far less pressing than in this country. Accordingly I am returning the typescript herewith.

We are hoping to have a little reunion Continental geneticists here in England during the month. It will be pleasant to see some old friends and get news of others.

Yours sincerely,
