

The Blair Hotel,
Minehead, Somersetshire.

August 25th 1931.

Dear Fisher.

I should be very pleased if you would accept a copy of my little book which will be published on Thursday. But I am afraid the treatment is far too elementary to be of any interest to you.

As you have done so much in this field I have often referred to your work. I have throughout endeavoured to make full acknowledgement to you and to all other authors, and I don't think I have missed doing so anywhere. But if I have I should be extremely glad if you would let me know of any such slip. I do sincerely hope

But where I have quoted your views
I have done so in a way you approve of and without distorting them.

If you do have the time to glance through it, I need hardly say how grateful I should be for suggestions and corrections.

I hear you have been to America and trust you had an interesting time there and were able to see some of the more important work.
I return to Oxford at the end of the week.

Yours sincerely,
L. B. Ford