Dear Sister,

I was so glad to get your kind letter. Yes, there were many things which struck me in the book, indeed, to tell you the truth, I have never read anything which I have found so helpful and suggestive - and on the very points where help was needed most. Certainly the pure-line argument pleased me as much as any thing. It has always been so difficult to get at the people who talk as if there were a sort of dague residue of blinding inheritance, to which they are always prepared to apply when it suits them!

I am so glad there is a chance of seeing you at Oxford.
I do hope you will come, and I shall be delighted if you will stay with me. I should be very glad indeed to meet Clapham. Perhaps he would come to dinner; if so it would make a good opportunity for us all to have a talk.

I return at the end of this week, but have closed my flat and am staying in College for the next week or two. Afterward I return to it early in October and will then write to you and suggest some dates. I have been going about a good bit lately, so it has hardly been worth while keeping the flat going. My landlady is glad to go home for a few weeks and I find it such a warning to shut the place up.

It is kind of you to suggest that I should come over to lunch in a week or two, and I should much like to do so if I can get away. But I am trying to get as much as possible done before the term begins and it may be a bit difficult to leave for a whole day.

But at any rate I hope to see you at Oxford soon.

Yours sincerely,
E. B. Washburn
