Dear Gilmour,

It is so kind of you to write so cordially about the Genetic Garden project which I was afraid might be rather coldly received for the same sorts of reason as have led to difficulty in co-operation with the Department of Botany in the teaching of Genetics. It makes me really happy that nothing of the kind has influenced your feelings.

I have already found that those Geneticists of whom I have the highest opinion think well of the idea, and I have no doubt that at the next stage the A.R.C. will need to take opinions more widely than it has already done. I hope I may now mention your name if opportunity arises in this connection.

Yours sincerely,
