

4th March, 1953.

My dear Harland,

The Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society have asked me to give the Ramsden Memorial Lecture next Monday and I have chosen "The Evolution of Genetics" as a topic. As I am flying to Australia on the following Wednesday morning I find I shall be able to see friends in Manchester during the morning of Tuesday, taking thereafter the 2.20 train for Euston. Perhaps I should be able to see something of your department, or for that matter, of Radio-astronomy or anything else of interest.

Yours sincerely,
