

28th October, 1955.

My dear Lowndes,

Thanks for your letter and offprints. That on the Wolf strikes me as particularly interesting. I found A. V. Hill's vanity a grave drawback when I had anything to do with him, but I suppose that is what happens to clever, handsome, and successful men whom circumstances have never spanked! I am not a bit surprised by him having acted foolishly and inconsiderately in respect of your research.

I had not heard of Probus School. Perhaps I could make it a visit if you were there during my next Easter's primrose hunt. Henry Ford at least tells me that homostyles have been found in Cornwall.

Sincerely yours,
