

4th. November 1947.

My dear Rob,

Thursday will be rather a mix up. I shall be attending a Royal Society Council meeting until about 4.30. It ^{might} ~~ought to~~ be worth while for you to drop in to take tea with me there, with a view to discussing your paper afterwards. There follows a Bakerian Lecture, which I need not attend as it is on high speed Diesel engines, or something of the kind, and Mather is coming to dine with me at the Dining Club, for which we shall meet at Brown's about 6 to 6.30.

We might do this if it suits you.

We shall be having a Christmas dinner in College I think about 9th. December, for which it might suit you to be my guest, and stay the night or longer, if you find that convenient. If you think this is workable I will hunt out and send you the official invitation card. It seems to be a black tie occasion.

Yours sincerely,
