My dear Race,

Many thanks for your letter and the review of Fraser Robert's book. I am extremely glad that you found it good, as he has certainly taken a good deal of trouble about it, and for years has given his mind to the kind of problems to which he is trying to introduce the reader. I think your review is entirely admirable.

I have not heard from Fraser Roberts lately about the Bristol data, and I think I remember telling him that there was no immediate hurry about it, so I suppose he is having a bit of holiday over Easter. I think it is very valuable to have someone like him on, or near, the spot to take a live interest in the sources of different sections of the compilation, rather than accept a block as big as this seems to be for incorporation, unanalysed, without other material.

I was rung up to-day from one of the London hospitals on a twin case, in which one member is, I think, in an asylum, and for which they are anxious to obtain a diagnosis of homozygosity. So far as I have the facts, it is the kind of case which would deserve a visit to London, if Taylor can spare you. I will write later when I have the particulars in writing.

Yours sincerely,
