

June 2, 1942

Dear Topley,

I have been looking over Martin's paper on the Fungicidal value of Copper Compounds, and my impression is that he has handled the statistics quite successfully. I see that the more important of his conclusions are based on comparisons of the regression of mortality probit on log concentration, and I have no doubt that, using the methods he describes, these comparisons have been well established.

As I do not think you raised any point you want specially gone into, I am returning the paper herewith.

Yours sincerely,