

09M.C
T672

Decentring Research: Reflecting On Reflecting Teams

A dissertation submitted to meet the requirements of the degree of

Master of Clinical Science.

Department of Psychiatry, Adelaide University

August, 2004.

Andrew Tootell

BA, Grad. Dip (Law), BSW (Hons).

Abstract

This dissertation is an interview based qualitative research study into reflecting team practice. The central question posed is “What can therapists learn from reflecting on their own and their clients’ experience of therapy?” Interviews with three clients and two therapists were recorded and transcribed for research purposes. Interview questions were derived from key themes identified in the literature: becoming a client; the experience of self; the experience of the therapeutic relationship; the experience of specific therapeutic practices; and the experience of outcomes. Drawing on White and Epston (1990) the author develops a decentred approach to research practice that is congruent with the values and philosophy of reflecting teams and narrative therapy.

A key finding to emerge from this study is the importance of paying attention to the client’s experience of the therapists; the therapists’ experience of self; and the therapists’ experience of their relationship to their colleagues on the reflecting team. According to both therapists and clients interviewed for this study it is important for the therapists to be there as ‘persons’ not just as ‘professionals’. For example, one of the therapists interviewed spoke of reflecting from “the heart” rather than doing “technique-driven” reflections. Also, the clients spoke about the importance of the “down-to-earth” way in which the therapists communicated. This helps both to establish a positive relationship and to decentre the ‘professional knowledge’ of the therapist. The degree of comfort and trust experienced by members of the reflecting team with each other also seemed to enhance the experience of therapy for all participants. The findings support the use of reflecting teams in agencies as a form of brief therapy and as a means of ongoing professional development. They also support the findings of previous research that we need to pay more attention to how the therapeutic relationship operates in a reflecting team context (Gaddis, 1998; 2002).

Furthermore, these findings suggested that the process of participating in these research interviews was helpful to both therapists and their clients. To therapists, in the sense that the process helped them to put into words their practice wisdom, by reflecting on their own practice and the experience of their clients; to clients, in the sense that it complemented the therapeutic process they were involved in and gave them the opportunity to give something back to others.

The findings are examples of local knowledge only, and make no validity claims to universal truth status. Claims made cannot therefore be generalised to other practice contexts. However, the author draws a number of implications for clinical and research practice from the findings and these are discussed in detail in chapter five. The author acknowledges that these implications are based on his own subjective reading of the findings and practitioners are invited to reach their own conclusions as to the relevance of these findings for their own practice.

CONTENTS

CHAPTER ONE: INTRODUCTION	1
CHAPTER TWO: LITERATURE REVIEW	5
1. Introduction	5
2. Research into Individual Therapy	7
2.1 The Paradigmatic and Narrative Modes	7
2.2 Freud's Case Histories	10
2.3 Experience and Experiencing	16
2.4 Client Experience of Therapy	19
2.5 Therapist Experience of Therapy	27
3. Reflecting Teams	29
3.1 Research into Reflecting Teams	33
4. Conclusion: Statement of the Research Problem	36
CHAPTER THREE: DECENTRING RESEARCH PRACTICE	38
1. Introduction	38
2. Search for a Method	39
3. Beyond Method: Towards a Decentred Research Practice	43
4. Data Production	51
4.1 Research Interviews and Knowledge Formation	51

4.2	The Sociocultural Context	53
4.3	Selection and Recruitment of Research Participants	54
4.4	Designing the Interview Guide	56
5.	Data Analysis	58
5.1	Representation and Analysis of the Transcripts	58
5.2	From First Order to Second Order Interviews	60
6.	Alternative Justification Principles to Validity	63
6.1	Using Writing as a Method of Reflexive Inquiry	65
6.2	A Two-Way Account of Research	66
6.3	Authentication	67
7.	Discussion of the Implications of the Research Findings	68
8.	Conclusion	68

CHAPTER FOUR: RESEARCH FINDINGS

1.	Jane	70
1.1	Interview Setting/Process	70
1.2	The Interview Summary	70
2.	Carole Meech	79
2.1	Interview Setting/Process	80
2.2	The First Research Letter	80
2.3	The Second Research Letter	90
3.	Debra and Danny	96
3.1	Interview Setting/Process	96
3.2	The Interview Summary	96

4.	Andrew Wood	108
4.1	Interview Setting/Process	108
4.2	The First Research Letter	108
4.3	The Second Research Letter	116

CHAPTER FIVE: IMPLICATIONS FOR PRACTICE

1.	Introduction	128
2.	Clinical Implications	130
2.1	Becoming a Client (Client Expectations)	130
2.2	Experience of Self	132
2.3	Experience of the Therapeutic Relationship	134
2.4	Experience of Outcomes (Therapeutic Practices)	139
2.5	Implications for Agencies	141
3.	Research Implications	142
3.1	Distinguishing Research from Supervision and Therapy Conversations	142
3.2	Research as Professional and Personal Transformation	144
3.3	Therapist Experience of the Research	146
3.4	Client Experience of the Research	146
3.5	What I Would Have Done Differently in Hindsight	147
3.6	Critique of Decentred Research	148
3.7	Suggestions for Future Research	149
4.	Conclusion	150

REFERENCES

152

APPENDIX ONE: INTERVIEW GUIDES

162