Story of the ghost Terakunene.

In former days there lived on Abaiang a man named Terakunene, the son of Te Boruako and Nei Tuani Kamauri.

And on <sup>one</sup> a day the people of the land were preparing for the sport of boxing. All the young fighting men were making ready for that sport, for in those days all young men were expected to take a part therein.

x They practised on the ocean beaches to get their <sup>into physical shape</sup> wind, and they laid them to sleep away from their wives. So Terakunene also trained for the games on the ocean beach ~~to~~ eastward of his paternal lands, which were called Tebakabaka (north of Koinawa village).

His food was brought to him from the house by his parents. And once as he slept on the ocean beach three women who came from the island of Marakei appeared to him in a dream.

The names of those women were

But Terakunene knew his mother, and when she came to embrace him he evaded her. She came after him, he sprang upon the rocks by the sea. She came after him, behold! he set forth, he walked upon the sea. And he disappeared.

When Terakunene disappeared he passed through all the dwellings of the spirits under the sky; he went also to the underworld. When he came back from the land of spirits he passed through the Gilberts from South to North. He went about his daily tasks <sup>and</sup> behaved in a usual manner, hiding his change in character from other people.

Utiron to choose a king from among them. And there were two brothers, the elder a leper, who lived alone on the ocean beach. So his brother was about to be chosen king. But it came into Krakumene's heart that he would abide <sup>a time</sup> in Tabitenea; so he stayed, but none saw him. It came into his heart to visit the leper on the eastern beach. Those two became friends and Krakumene cured the man's leprosy. And behold, when that was done they went westward to the maneaba. The people were amazed when they saw that the leper was become beautiful and came with a beautiful one they had not seen before. <sup>The two men who were to be the kings had a sister whom Terakumene married and they had a daughter.</sup> So they made the two of them their kings. And Krakumene married a woman and had children by her.

Then Krakumene disappeared from his wife, over the sea, and only then did they know him for a spirit.

Terakumene set off on his travels leaving wife and daughter behind and they only realized <sup>that</sup> he was an anti when he walked across the sea.

1
A song of Nareau.

The ancestor, the Tree is not asunder; it is fallen across their land of Matang in Samoa. I will take its flowers as ornaments under the noonday; its time is come.

The woman Kabaraki comes from Angitano in the depths,
she has a necklet of porpoise-teeth, Te Urukāmeren;
I will plunge down and take it in the secret places
of Teuenei; I will have a necklet of porpoise teeth, Te Urukāmeren. I will cut them to pieces, I will tear them apart, I will pierce them through with my barbed spear. It is lifted from its place on my canoe.

Whence comes thy canoe? Its sail is furled in the lee of the maneaba at Taribo. The people of Umanateuenei hold its stem; the people of Imotu and Rurutei give it welcome. They spread the tidings — alas! A great defeat! The warriors lie slain, far away; the pursuit is hot in the wake of the flyers, they fall dead on the ground, low lie they — o — a — ee — aa — as the.

The song of Mo'ina.

The roof-tree of heaven is smitten; it murmurs. Give heed to my song! (The song of) the voyage of the sea-brood, Jaburumai and Anurawai. It comes in sight from the east, it lashes the sea to foam; unslent and unportunate in manhood is the hero (with his) spear, the swift, the broad pointed.

What has he destroyed? He has destroyed the land of Abemama, he has thrust home to east of Kamatasa; there stays the mark of Nawai bitia's spear. "I will take aim", (he says) "and pierce them through". He strikes the bedrock, it is shattered. The porpoise and the whale lie dead in the wake of Bue and Reiongo's children. Piteously wail Nareau and Ningomingo from the tree-tops by the western beach; they dare not face the wrath of the fish brought magically from under the southern sky.

I hasten forth with my fleet, far out over the horizon; but where shall the rumour of my going fall silent? Loud is the noise of Anamange's swarm, a countless host, a shoal of porpoise; for it would slay and devour, the day of its travels is come.

See, I take up the magic spell for I know the charms to <sup>appease</sup> ~~destroy~~ the fish that come from the eastward; (their names are) Bikeinika and Bikeiwa.

(A boast of the singer now follows, quite irrelevant to his main theme).

lift up the heavens and I will overturn and spilt them, I will reach them through, I ~~will~~ <sup>shall</sup> (but) strike the magic staff and they rattle overhead (The poet's boast ends).

Once, twice repeat the spell, let it fall upon the face of the ocean; so — I, even I who speak, will tell the tale! I, <sup>even</sup> ~~who~~ <sup>I who</sup> ~~must~~ speak, remember the homeland Manra! Ah, let me not die, let me not be buried by the rocks and stony sides of Mao and Kita! For so would the days of my <sup>manhood</sup> ~~manhood~~ be utterly extinguished; far away is the land of my manhood's love, I have left it in the land of Manra, in the land of Bouru, at Meineaba. Let us tread again the rocky places that stretch out to sea; (so small are they) that we shall slip if the fin of porpoise and whale is lifted to strike from

I will call down the winds to bring me <sup>fitting</sup> ~~beautiful~~ words of song, the winds of my ghostly forefathers. It falls in the midst, in the midst of my people, I hear its rumour and its rumbling; Lo, let us tread the rocky places of the sea, let us find beautiful words to talk of it.
It thunders; The sides of heaven resound with the waves of the West
